

My name is Jeff. And I came out of homosexuality.

As a teen and young adult I felt trapped by my same-sex attractions. Many around me didn't understand how to help, and others said I was "born gay" and there were no other options. After spending time in gay relationships, I realized that being gay wasn't satisfying. It was taking me down.

I decided that no matter what it took, I wanted to face my homosexuality head on and overcome it.

Although the journey out was difficult, compassionate Christians helped me, and over time my behaviors, identity and feelings began to change. Today, I'm a happily married man and father of three boys.

There is so much confusion and anger in today's culture about how to approach the topic of homosexuality. Many think it's hateful to say that gays and lesbians can change. But I know that real love tells the truth—change is possible.

I hope you'll come to the Love Won Out conference in San Antonio on April 18. This one-day event helps friends and family, and people struggling with same-sex attraction, to approach the subject with grace and truth, to love through the turmoil, and to find the hope that can be so freeing.

Nationally known experts will address everything from why some people struggle with homosexuality to the profound significance of God's created intent for sexuality. If you love someone who is struggling with homosexuality and you are needing hope, Love Won Out is an engaging and uplifting day you'll never forget.
